The second source of inaccuracy in the estimates of the prevalence of poverty (on a household level) is the unit of the CCHS. The unit used to aggregate the data of the 2008/2009 CCHS was a household, not a family. Therefore, a household may include different family members who are not related to each other. A third source of inaccuracy is related to the lack of information about the presence of persons living with a disability (PLWD) in the CCHS. The information about the prevalence of PLWD and of the proportion of PLWD in the population was available in the 2008 National Statistics Yearbook (ONS [@CR21]). The number of PLWD living in the household of an individual (including children) living in the household of the head of the household) was calculated by adding the PLWD to the numbers of people living in the household of the head of the household, excluding those living in institutions. According to the national statistics, the proportion of PLWD living in the household was 10.7 %, and the proportion of the population living in a household in which one or more PLWD live was 13.6 % (ONS [21]). It is important to note that according to the 2008 National Statistics Yearbook, the household of an individual living in an institution was excluded, not the household of the individual living in the household of the head of the household. Despite these possible sources of inaccuracy in the estimates of the prevalence of poverty, the period prevalence of poverty, defined as the percentage of the population below the poverty line, was estimated using the most recent information available. This is why the estimates of the poverty threshold that we used are the most recent estimates available 82157476af
